

GARDEN DESIGN

Grab your spade, it's time to revamp an overgrown garden in Dillmouth. The south-facing plot looks out to the sea, just as Hillside did. TWELVE new items are to be planted and they are all mentioned in Sleeping Murder.

The areas 1 to 12 are marked on the plan. Use the clues to decide where each plant should go. Don't worry about Miss Marple's constant enemy — bindweed! That will grow and spread by itself.

.....
The lilac is the middle of three new items that run in a line from east to west.
.....

.....
The largest area is where the daffodil bulbs are to be planted.
.....

.....
The rose bed is square in shape. Old Manning wanted the delphiniums to be next to it, but that didn't happen, although they are in the same east to west line of planting.
.....

.....
The yew and the poppies are to be planted as far from each other as possible.
.....

.....
The forsythia will not be next to the bench at the far end of the garden, but it will be in the eastern side, as will the begonias, which can be found next to two sections of path.
.....

.....
Neither the mint, nor the weigela, nor the yew will abut the area around the house. The mint will be west of the central path.
.....

.....
The cornflowers are to go north of the roses, although Foster thinks they are in the wrong place.
.....

.....
The calceolarias must be next to the house.
